RE: Reply Comments -on the Notice of Proposed Rule Making and Order, Adopted January 16, 2002, Submitted by Funds For Learning, LLC

Funds For Learning appreciates this opportunity to respond to a number of the initial comments that were filed in response to the Commission’s Notice of Proposed Rule Making and Order, proposing various changes in the schools and libraries support mechanism.

As could have been anticipated, the comments represented the interests of a diverse group of stakeholders, interests that sometimes, of course, must compete. In adjusting the program's rules, the Commission must strike the appropriate balance between (1) helping schools and libraries, particularly the neediest ones, gain access to advanced telecommunications services, (2) continuing to encourage competition in the provision of telecommunications services and (3) applying appropriate controls against potential waste, fraud and abuse in the program.

Eligible Services Determination

Commentators, both those in industry and those in the school and library community, were of a mixed mind about the desirability of developing a more specific, public eligible services list. We believe that consideration of this issue may have been confused by the proposal to incorporate an eligible services checkoff into the online application form itself. We believe that the vast majority of comments, in fact, supported providing applicants with better guidance on eligible services, whether in the form of specific product names, expanded information about “conditional” services or through an explanation of the additional documentation that would be requested by the Schools and Libraries Division. While some comments supported incorporating the list into the application form itself, we believe that the Universal Service Administrative Company correctly anticipated that for now, this would be a more ambitious job than it could undertake.

We believe most of the objections that were expressed were based on concerns about whether the SLD could actually maintain an eligible services list in a timely way, and that if it could not, that that might discourage schools and libraries from adopting cutting-edge technologies that had not been approved.

As several comments noted, USAC apparently has its own list of at least 750 specific eligible items and services, identified by at least product brand, number and utilization. Once again, we assert that this list should be made public—and the sooner, the better. We believe that both applicants and service providers should be permitted to submit products for review by a certain date, and that the Schools and Libraries Division should commit to reviewing such products by a date in advance of the filing window. The SLD should also make clear that applicants are not limited to specifying products that are included on the list. Rather, the list will simply help ensure that applicants choose products that will, in fact, be treated as eligible.

Here are some “real-world” examples from the applications of some of the school districts with which we work that will clarify how a public list might help:

- A district submitted a funding request for an Ethernet switch for a school building's local area network, with the detailed parts list included as part of its vendor's proposed scope of work. Based on the existing eligible services list, one would assume that a "switch" was eligible within a school-based LAN. However, from a detailed parts list of 21 items, the SLD reviewer trimmed an item that appeared as "Anylayer SMON stack license for the P330." Fortunately, that represented only $392.70 of the $13,474.36 cost of the product. But if the SLD has determined that that item is not eligible, why can't that information be shared with the wider applicant and service provider community so that the school district can make the determination correctly from the start?

- In another case, a school district applied for discounts on a school licensing agreement for a bundle of software products, only some of which were eligible for support. The district did a calculation, based on its understanding of the standard prices of the ineligible components, to exclude them. But, as it turned out, the SLD had its own formula and readjusted the size of the funding request. The district would have been happy to use the SLD's formula from the start—if it had only known it.

To serve the needs of the school and enterprise markets, many manufacturers are developing innovative products that may combine storage, caching and routing functionality, that may blend e-mail and voice mail functions, that substitute wireless solutions for wireline and that combine the transmission of voice, data and video. The E-rate eligibility of these products is a critical issue that may affect how a product is marketed, bundled and priced. It would be far better for these determinations to be made through a formal, thoughtful process at the beginning of a product marketing cycle by persons with technological expertise than "on the fly" by Program Integrity Assurance reviewers facing a pile of Form 471 applications.

The comments submitted by eChalk LLC detailed the frustrations experienced by one relatively small company in trying to get the SLD to treat its products in a consistent way. When mistakes are made by application reviewers, it can jeopardize not only an applicant's ability to implement a particular technology solution but also the substantial resources that a company may have expended to make a sale to a school district through the program. Correcting a misapplication of eligibility rules and then actually getting a funding commitment decision letter in hand can take as long as nine months or even a year—even at just the SLD level. These delays only serve to “punish” vendors trying to participate in the program and applicants willing to adopt solutions that are the most “cutting edge.”

We believe that the submission of products for review and inclusion should be voluntary, which should address the concerns expressed by companies such as Verizon. In addition, BellSouth Corporation and SBC Communications objected to including such a list in the application itself, citing the fact that BellSouth’s Centrex service alone would require a list of 1,175 items.<sup>1</sup> While we agree with the many commenters that said that it would be virtually impossible to implement this list within the application itself, we do not believe these comments should deter the Commission from providing more product-specific guidance on eligible services.

Considering the Commission’s recent efforts to promote clarity in billing, it would seem reasonable to expect a phone company to be willing to explain to a school district or library that something called “MultiServ PLUS service” is, in fact, a Centrex service that is eligible for support. If voice mailboxes remain ineligible for support, BellSouth could simply provide the various names it uses for those services and products so that those costs could be deducted. We believe that this kind of detailed review of voice mail is, in fact, a waste of resources on the part of applicants, reviewers and service providers, but provide it here simply to demonstrate that a simple list, even one with 1,175 BellSouth items on it, should not be difficult to compile and display on the SLD’s Web site. (Further, if the SLD will simply release its list, no matter how long, FFL hereby volunteers to make it available in some sort of searchable format, for free, on our own corporate Website. FFL has previously implemented a searchable version of the existing eligible services list on its site.)

If, on the other hand, a phone company such as BellSouth would prefer to field questions from E-rate applicants trying to decipher its bills, rather than to submit a list of product names to the SLD, it should be free to do so. However, since most companies choose product names for marketing purposes, rather than for communicating their relative E-rate eligibility, we believe that most E-rate applicants would appreciate a small amount of guidance in this regard—and, in fact, the application review process would greatly benefit from it.

Despite the picture painted by some states of a landscape that is devoid of competition, we believe that competition, particularly among internal connections companies, is very robust in the K-12 education market. Too-casual determinations of product eligibility can, in fact, have an anti-competitive effect when one company learns that its solution is being rejected by SLD reviewers while a competitor's has been given a green light, whether appropriately or not. Further, without a formal, publicly available determination by the SLD, companies may, in fact, make claims about the eligibility of competitors' products that may or may not be correct. As a result, as the Colorado Department of Education aptly noted, "the present process used by the SLD to determine eligibility is akin to playing Russian roulette."<sup>2</sup> Applicants are too often forced to, close their eyes, spin the barrel, and keep their fingers crossed that the SLD reviewer decides that the product they have requested is eligible.

Certainly, most products will only be eligible if used in a certain way. The list would enable the SLD to clarify those conditions. Further, we support comments, such as those filed by the Colorado Department of Education, which suggested the SLD should clarify what documentation it will ask for in certain circumstances so that applicants can submit it along with their applications if they would prefer to avoid those time-consuming, stress-provoking phone calls from an SLD auditor, demanding to see a particular document within seven days.

For instance, if the SLD will ultimately require the submission of proof that a contract originally contained voluntary extension language and that such an extension has been properly executed, it should detail that upfront, and encourage applicants to go ahead and submit those documents, if they choose. We concur with the comments filed by the Pennsylvania Department of Education, which said repeated questions like these are among the most wasteful aspects of the program, for both applicants and the SLD staff.<sup>3</sup> In Year 4, for instance, an SLD reviewer required additional documentation for an application from one of our clients that was already 2 ½-inches thick. Nevertheless, it would have been much easier to retrieve the additional documentation when the application was being submitted, rather than six months later when it was undergoing review and the pertinent contracts had been filed away.<sup>4</sup>

We are gratified that USAC itself supported the establishment of “a database” of these determinations, but one that would be separate from the online Form 471 application.<sup>5</sup> Significantly, USAC said the proposed database “could provide increased customer satisfaction due to fewer calls to applicants during the application review process, fewer documentation requirements and faster funding commitment decisions.” We are puzzled, however, by the logic of USAC proposing to update this on a weekly basis “for USAC’s internal use,” but only “once a year prior to the opening of the window” for the rest of the public.<sup>6</sup> Why should USAC guard this as a secret, unless it is not confident that its initial determinations are, in fact, the correct ones? If the issue is the cost of updating a Web-based data base, then it should simply post its internal document, in whatever format it is updated, so that the stakeholder community can download it from the SLD Website and review it. USAC’s position fails to recognize that schools and libraries, particularly the larger ones and those applying as consortia, engage in procurements for E-rate eligible products and services throughout the year, not just during a few weeks in the fall.<sup>7</sup> All stakeholders, both applicants and vendors, need the best, most recent information that is available.<sup>8</sup>

Further, contrary to USAC’s suggestion, not every “new technology” can be accommodated through the existing service substitution policy, which narrowly restricts

<sup>4</sup> Since our initial comments were filed, we have observed that the SLD’s Program Integrity Assurance reviewers appear to be applying a whole new set of criteria to the eligibility of Plain Old Telephone Service. (We wonder, in fact, if this is a new effort to level the playing field between wireline services and wireless services by submitting wireline services to the same kind of time-consuming, vague and arbitrary review that we cited in our initial comments.) The nature of the questions have been inconsistent with the SLD’s published advisory on the treatment of wireline services provided to administration buildings. These kinds of eligibility distinctions need to be clarified before applications are submitted, not when they are in the middle of a review.

<sup>7</sup> The State of Florida Department of Management Services, for instance, was among the entities that posted a Form 470 application for the 2003 funding year on May 1, 2002—almost as soon as the SLD made the online application form available for that year.

<sup>8</sup> If the SLD or Commission changes a formal eligibility determination from eligible to ineligible at some point in the process, it should provide a “safe harbor” to those schools and libraries that submitted applications when the product or service was identified as eligible. We urge the Commission to take that position if any products or configurations are treated less favorably as a result of this NPRM.

permissible substitutions and does not let applicants apply approved discounts to a more expensive product.<sup>9</sup> A district may, in fact, wish to adopt a new technology when it seeks funding during the application filing window. Applicants must be permitted to seek funding for products and services that are not already on the list. Nevertheless, a public list should also serve to improve the service substitution process, permitting applicants to simply cite the list when they file a Form 471 with a minor modification of contract, rather than having to formally seek the SLD's approval.

In summary, we believe that USAC should be instructed to develop a timely, product-specific public review process that could be made available to both applicants and service providers alike. Further, it should be clearly communicated that applicants are not limited to those products cited on the list. However, we believe that both applicants and service providers will be encouraged to use the list to improve their chances for a favorable review. This change should take effect immediately.

Making the Money Go Farther

Most comments agreed that some changes need to be made so that whatever funds are available can be distributed to more applicants, rather than simply letting the same, low-income applicants build better and better networks. The challenge becomes creating rules that make sense from a policy perspective that the SLD will also be in a position to administer and enforce.

We believe the quickest, most equitable way to accomplish this would be to adjust the discount matrix so that everyone would have to, in effect, make do with less. Because some applicants, after five years, have undoubtedly come to build their discounts for recurring services or maintenance contracts into their budgets, we would recommend phasing in matrix adjustments over a period of time. Reducing the 90 percent discount band down to 80 or 70 percent would still provide a substantial discount, but it would also probably force some applicants to ratchet back their implementation plans to levels that, in truth, are probably more in line with what many applicants can actually manage in

<sup>9</sup> USAC, p. 11-12. Once again we assert that there is no reason why program rules should prohibit an applicant from using its own funds to purchase a more expensive product, assuming that the service substitution is in line with other E-rate program rules and state and local procurement regulations.

a single year. As noted by others, this would also serve as a deterrent to some fraudulent vendors.<sup>10</sup>

We believe that an “every other year” approach, while potentially attractive on paper, is fraught with operational issues that would only serve to create new ways to “game the system.” These include:

- How entities included in a consortia application will be treated if they previously received discounts on their own site-specific services (or vice versa).
- How applicants that can qualify for high discount rates on a district-wide basis are expected to manage their requests for shared and site-specific services to ensure that they are not taking advantage of whatever new rules are put in place.
- How discounts for maintenance contracts should be managed.

We believe that the program should support ongoing maintenance for high-discount applicants. Will this require the creation of a new class of services? Will these contracts be given precedence over requests for new internal connections? Will this approach encourage vendors and applicants to sign contracts for “maintenance” that include the leasing of replacement equipment in hopes of getting it funded?

- How to prevent applicants from requesting twice as many services when their funding year arrives? For instance, if a district knows that this is the year when its 80-percent-discount schools will get funded, while the 90-percent schools must wait, won’t it simply try to accomplish twice as much work in the 80 percent schools that year?

Before a new priority arrangement is adopted, we believe the Commission needs to review what it wants to accomplish and whether the SLD can actually manage that approach with its current systems and application forms. The potential impact of any proposal should be vetted both internally and with a diverse group of stakeholders before it is adopted.

<sup>10</sup> We were astonished to read the Wisconsin Department of Public Instruction’s comments (see p. 6), reporting that the SLD staff had said that it has no automatic alert process to trigger reviews of applications that seek relatively large amounts of funding on a per-student or per-patron basis. If they are not already doing so, SLD reviewers should be instructed to use the population figure reported in Block 3 to make this calculation for all pertinent Form 471 applications. If they are not making use of this information, then we agree with the many parties who observed that Block 3 of the Form 471 should be eliminated because it produces meaningless numbers. If the Commission wishes to collect information on the impact of the E-rate program over the past five years, it should ask applicants to complete a separate survey on the technology improvements they have achieved over the life of the program.

We have attached a listing of the entities that received internal connections support in the 2001 (Year 4) Funding Year to try once again to provide some insight into the potential impact such a proposal could have if it were applied in the next funding year. It is worth noting that of the roughly 2,300 entities on this list, 907 received $50,000 or less, 557 received $25,000 or less and 250 received $10,000 or less.<sup>11</sup> In the case of school districts that received support at the 90 percent level, it is possible that their schools with lower discount rates would still be able to qualify for support. However, it is unlikely that applicants at the 89-86 percent discount rate would qualify because their discount rates are produced on a shared basis among multiple entities and presumably all of the entities listed on the application would be disqualified.<sup>12</sup>

Payment Processes

We support those parties who asked the Commission to authorize the direct reimbursement of applicants utilizing the BEAR process because it will speed disbursements to applicants who have already paid their bills and alleviate the problem of vendors that fail to distribute these payments, or that file for bankruptcy before the payments can be distributed to their customers. In comments that we filed last year in response to the Commission's rule-making in connection with the Children's Internet Protection Act, we discussed the language in that law that supports direct payment to applicants.<sup>13</sup> CIPA specifies that a school or library that "knowingly fails to ensure the use of its computers in accordance" with its CIPA certification "shall reimburse all funds and discounts received under this subsection for the period covered by such certification." Clearly, Congress here assumed that direct payments could be made by schools and libraries to USAC, and, presumably, vice versa.

<sup>11</sup> Based on the Commission's decision in 2001 not to change the priority rules after applications had been submitted, we would not expect such a change to be imposed in the 2002 Funding Year. Nevertheless, we believe our analysis can help highlight some of the pitfalls associated with this particular solution. Because schools and libraries submitted applications for the 2002 Funding Year without any thought that success in the 2002 year ultimately could prevent them from receiving funding in the 2003 year, we urge the Commission to move very carefully before deciding to pursue this particular approach.

<sup>12</sup> If such a rule were adopted, it would force the SLD to pay much closer attention than it currently does to reviewing exactly where requested services were to be used.

<sup>13</sup> Comments filed by Funds For Learning on the Further Notice of Proposed Rule-Making, Adopted January 22, 2001.

We believe that applicants should still be required to get their vendor's signature before submitting a BEAR form seeking reimbursement, and that applicants should provide the same check on Service Provider Invoice Forms. Applicants would then be free to ask their providers for a copy of the invoice that was the basis of the vendor's submission so that they could help ensure that USAC was being billed properly. (In an ideal world, the vendor would detail the USAC-billed portion of the invoice on the applicant's own invoice.)

In the case of recurring monthly payments, it may not be necessary to require this review every month. However, we believe it is reasonable to require this sign-off at least at the start of the year for recurring services, signifying that both parties had reached agreement on the appropriate billing process. Further, vendors should be encouraged, if not required, to send the applicant a copy of a Service Provider Invoice Form submitted to USAC, to provide yet another check against mistakes.

We applaud BellSouth and SBC for acknowledging that "service providers should be able to offer a choice of payment methods" and agree that any new rule "should formalize the current procedural recommendation that carriers and applicants mutually agree on a payment method."<sup>14</sup> Nevertheless, we believe that USAC should modify its procedures to permit a single FRN to be depleted through a combination of BEAR and invoice submissions, particularly when a funding commitment is delayed long after the start of a funding year. As long as each party is serving as a check on the other, it will help assure that the process is orderly and protected from fraud. Indeed, this is possibly the most cost-effective step that the Commission could take to guard against fraud and abuse, simply because it would mirror standard business operating procedures.

Broader Issues for Review

In issuing its NPRM, the Commission asked commenters to address a number of specific issues, while opening the door for parties to offer broader suggestions. To the extent to which the Commission wants to consider proposals that were outside the scope of its original NPRM, we encourage it to issue another NPRM so that all affected stakeholders may have the opportunity to provide their perspectives on proposals that are under serious consideration. However, we would like to offer our own perspective on a few of these suggestions at this time.

Implicit in the comments filed by some state leaders was the view that if the goal of the E-rate program is to help schools and libraries get connected to the Internet, then USAC should simply write a check to the state and let state-level officials decide who deserves the discounts. Over the past two years, Funds For Learning has led dozens of E-rate training workshops around the country, and at the outset, we always try to help school and library officials understand that the E-rate program has a number of goals, only one of which is to get schools and libraries connected to online resources. The program is, of course, constructed the way it is to promote competition in the marketplace for eligible telecommunications services and to encourage exposure to the widest variety of possible solutions. Each year, the E-rate program makes available to schools and libraries an unprecedented amount of support for their technology efforts. It is appropriate that they be required to hold up their part of the bargain, namely that they encourage competition and be required to consider any responsive service offerings before using money that is contributed by telecommunications companies—and ultimately their ratepayers.

Eliminating the Form 470 Application—We are sympathetic to the argument that for many schools and libraries, there is, in fact, only one option for a telecommunications carrier and thus the posting of a Form 470 application covering local phone service amounts to a farce. Perhaps the Commission should grant relief from this requirement in those markets in which there is, in fact, only one Common Carrier available. However, we suspect that that number is quite small. Competition still prevails in the market for long distance services, for paging and cellular services and, in many markets, for broadband service. We suspect that the apparent lack of competition relates more to companies making their own business decisions on how to best deploy their marketing resources among potential business and consumer customers.

Any company that deliberately chooses to market to K-12 schools in the United States quickly recognizes that the market is a challenging one. Unlike many foreign countries, where a centralized educational authority makes decisions on behalf of all of the schools in the nation, a vendor faces a market in which only 6 percent of school districts have as many as 10,000 students and 47 percent have fewer 1,000.<sup>15</sup> Further, the E-rate rules themselves promote some distortion of this market as vendors naturally pursue those applicants that are likely to qualify for the highest discounts, particularly in the internal connections area. When companies are presented with a choice of more than 30,000 potential customers that must be signed up within a matter of weeks, clearly some applicants—namely the largest ones with the best prospects for qualifying for discounts—will likely be given a higher priority than others.

Nevertheless, in our own experience we have found:

- That many school districts would embrace alternative providers if one were available because they are often dissatisfied with the service they receive from their incumbent carrier. (Billing errors and problems retrieving SLD-requested information are but two of these problem areas.)
- That even when school districts ultimately don't qualify for E-rate support for internal connections, many of those with low discount rates will still proceed to buy products under the contracts they signed through the E-rate process to keep their technology implementations on track. Thus the program's rules help promote competition, even when schools don't ultimately qualify for discounts.
- That some companies are, in fact, beginning to target smaller, rural school districts when their products provide appropriate solutions to their needs. These solutions include satellite and wireless Internet access.

At a time when the Commission is wrestling with many issues related to competition in telecommunications services and the deployment of broadband services nationwide, we believe it would be short-sighted for the Form 470 to be abandoned. However, if the Commission decides to pursue this proposal, we would suggest that the application be abandoned only for the provision of POTS and only in designated markets. We recognize, however, that this would impose an additional burden of record-keeping on the SLD and the Commission.

The Commission may want to encourage USAC to target additional outreach activities to some of these other, competitive telecommunications carriers, as well as to Internet Service Providers and internal connections companies.

Block Grants Administered by the States—A number of state commenters have suggested that USAC should simply permit state officials to take charge of administering the discounts provided in their states. Although the Council of Chief State School Officers discussed this proposal, it recommended only that the Commission issue another NPRM to fully explore the issues involved. We suspect that many states would be ill-equipped to manage this process without a significant commitment of resources that would otherwise be distributed directly to applicants. Considering that members of Congress vigorously objected to creating a separate Schools and Libraries Corporation to administer the schools and libraries program, we do not believe it would look with favor on a proposal to, in effect, create 51 separate SLDs. We are sympathetic, however, to those state leaders that said that USAC should provide more direct financial support in recognition of the role they play in training applicants and providing application support. (Considering that the program now generates more than $13 million a quarter in interest on its undisbursed funds, the Commission should consider designating some of those interest earnings to support the education and outreach activities of state-level officials.<sup>16</sup> Doing so would undoubtedly help reduce the volume of undisbursed funds over time.)

Still, we believe that USAC should retain responsibility for disbursing E-rate discounts. Many of the applicants with whom we work already believe they receive inequitable treatment by their states when it comes to distributing funding in support of educational technology. The No Child Left Behind Act, which President Bush signed in January 2002, will enable states to distribute at least 47.5 percent of the new technology block grant (totaling $700 million) according to the criteria of their own competitive grant competitions. States are also expected to give precedence in these grant competitions to districts that are “behind the curve” in implementing technology—a provision that should help state leaders address any inequities they perceive in the way the E-rate program has deployed technology in their states.

One of the plusses of the E-rate program is that it permits districts to contract directly with vendors of their own choosing, and receive direct support for these purchases—without having to compete for grants or curry favor in a political process.

<sup>16</sup> See “Federal Universal Service Support Mechanisms Fund Size Projections for the Third Quarter 2002,” filed by USAC on May 2, 2002.

States are always free to create and manage statewide consortia applications on behalf of their districts if they wish to free them from the burden of managing their own applications.

Disbursement Information

We repeat our assertion that one very cost-effective step that USAC could take to help close the disbursement gap would be to publicize what portion of its approved funding commitments an applicant actually used. We have found that there is widespread confusion over the amount of money that schools and libraries have actually put to use through the E-rate program. Indeed, citing the information that the SLD currently disseminates about funding commitments, WorldCom Inc. incorrectly said in its comments that “USAC has distributed $4.6 billion on internal connections. . . .”<sup>17</sup> The discrepancy in disbursements has been a reality for some time; with a recent change in its reporting format, USAC can now report that schools and libraries have actually used only $3.039 billion worth of discounts for internal connections and a total of only $4.918 billion for all service categories since the program began.<sup>18</sup> While we find that members of the press and policy makers frequently fail to understand this distinction, it is an important one. The fact that a major telecommunications carrier cites the commitment figure to support its case that applicants have already received more than enough to build adequate networks simply demonstrates that the statistics that are currently being disseminated create the false impression that applicants have received their discounts and are already awash in money. We believe that providing more information about how much applicants have actually been able to use will help to bring disbursements more in line with requests over time.

Appeals

We once again join the many commenters who encouraged the Commission to relax the timetable and filing standard for timely appeals. However, we plead with the

<sup>18</sup> USAC Quarterly Report to the FCC for the Third Quarter 2002, filed May 2, 2002, see pp. 21-24. Many policy makers assume that applicants have actually received $10 billion worth of discounts over the program’s first four years, based on the maximum amount that USAC could commit.

Commission to ensure that this change is accompanied by appropriate adjustments in staffing.

The comments filed by the National Education Association, the International Society for Technology in Education and the Consortium for School Networking praised the Commission for its efforts to reduce its backlog of pending appeals since June 2000.<sup>19</sup> We appreciate this progress, but also wish to observe that it appears the Commission staff manages its backlog, in part, by quickly dismissing appeals that were not timely filed, those that were filed simultaneously with the SLD or those whose facts were substantially similar to an earlier decision. While the Commission staff could reasonably be expected to take additional time to review new arguments, the result is that appellants who are ultimately successful may have been forced to wait so long for a decision that two budget years have passed, their own funds are no longer available, the issue is moot and the victory is Pyrrhic at best. This situation ultimately accentuates the “undisbursed funds” problem. Either additional resources should be devoted to guard against the SLD making the kind of mistakes that must be appealed or to improve the Commission’s ability to respond to appeals on the same timely basis that it demands of applicants.

A Final Observation on the “C” Word

As a company that has built what we believe is a national reputation for providing quality professional services, we are concerned about the many pejorative references to E-rate consultants that appear throughout the comments. In the past, we have offered to work with the USAC staff on any policies and procedures that would help distinguish reputable consultants from the disreputable, and we renew that offer again.

We support USAC’s proposal to issue identification numbers to companies and individuals that operate as E-rate consultants. We suggest that the approach of the Internal Revenue Service is instructive here. While a tax preparer is now required to sign a Form 1040 that he or she prepares, the taxpayer is ultimately responsible for the information that forms the basis of the tax return. Similarly, we would still expect our clients to sign their forms because we must rely on the information that they provide us in order to complete their applications. Ultimately, we view the process as collaborative; they provide us with the raw material with which we prepare their applications and we do our best to advise them of our understanding of the program's frequently shifting rules. The choices of the technologies they adopt—and the vendors they use—remain their own.

<sup>19</sup> Comments by the National Education Association, the International Society for Technology in Education and the Consortium for school Networking, April 5, 2002, see p. 24.

We are concerned about reports of applicants that appear to have become captive of consultants or vendors who are managing their applications for them, without their full knowledge of bidding decisions made on their behalf. We join the Office of Information Technology Services of North Carolina in expressing alarm at any consultant that would charge as much as a 30 percent contingency fee on the commitments received by an applicant.<sup>20</sup> Nevertheless, we believe that reputable consultants can serve a useful purpose in helping E-rate applicants manage the program's many processes, just as many school districts turn to outside specialists for help with other aspects of their operations that are not directly related to teaching.

We believe that applicants that have decided to hire professional help should be able to indicate on their application forms that the SLD should first call the individual or company that prepared their application in case questions arise. In many cases, the consultant will, in fact, have to obtain additional information from the applicant before it can address a specific request. If the Commission decides to modify the application form to permit the identification of the application preparer, it would be helpful if applicants could indicate that initial questions should be directed to their preparer. This would speed the application review process because our clients generally ask us to communicate with the SLD on their behalf because we are in a better position to discern what information the SLD is seeking.

Several commenters asked the SLD to provide additional information about appeals decisions. We endorse that suggestion. However, we wish to point out that for some time, Funds For Learning has provided a data base of major Commission appeals decisions on its Web site, www.fundsforlearning.com. Most of the Commission's substantive decisions are organized by date, appellant and the issue involved, and their texts are also searchable. This service is available for free, once a visitor has registered.

In addition, we have developed a tool it make it easier for program stakeholders to review the disbursements that various service providers have received since the E-rate program's start. This information is, of course, based on USAC's quarterly reports to the Commission, but we believe our tool makes the data more accessible to program stakeholders. We believe that the more E-rate program information is shared, the more self-policing the E-rate community can become.

Once again, we commend the Commission for taking the time to explore strategies for making the schools and libraries program operate more effectively. We appreciate the opportunity to provide input on these issues, and look forward to continuing to participate in the discussions as they are studied.

Respectfully submitted,
